confident hope. It has within the last few weeks been frequently remarked by many influential members of the community that the colony of Hongkong is sufficiently large to support the remunerative issue of two independent daily papers. • That such is the case we are fully persuaded, and in thus alluding to our contemporary would take the opportunity of remarking that we by no means deprecate a healthy competition in matter journalistic. Such also is his opinion if we are correctly informed, and but little reflection is needed to make it evident that the necessarily divergent points | the long list already on record. It may be of view from which most events would be objected that the police can hardly be ex viewed by persons differing in sentiments and aims, will often tend to help the reader to arrive at at a better decision as to the truth than were he to hear but one side of the question. But while thus avowing our belief in the good which may result both to our readers and ourselves from frank ity, have to record such events as the plunand outspoken difference of opinion, we would also say that we do most earnestly deprecate the personalities which so often disfigure the pages of colonial newspapers in various parts of the world. Our own intention is to deal with "measures not men" and while freely criticizing the one to respect the personal rights of the other.

The community of this flourishing colony is in our humble opinion too advanced and has matters fairly open to public discussion too important, to waste its time in reading articles chiefly to be found in the class of journal conducted in the style of the "Ea tonswill Gazette" and its rival so happily described in the inimitable pages of Pickwick. Our own desire is to live in peace with all men but we shall not, it is believed, be found wanting, if need be, to do battle for the right, if might should seem desirous to override it. Our efforts will be directed to the maintainance af law and order and (without undue subservience) of that innate feeling of loyalty which seems to be the natural birth right of most Englishmen. Nor will it be forgotten that although this is a British Colony, a large and important section of the community are natives of other countries and that as good citizens their interests are also to be represented should need arise.

divening Mail, Jan. 23, with ease be pushed forward through Ta Tsien | Amongst public matters of local interest expedition from the Indian side, whilst in the Colony more than any other is the ganisation of the police force. By an extract which appears hereunder from the North-China Daily Newsit will appear that although even under the improved regime of the model settlement certain abuses which the to fall for editorial remonstrance, still the tone of the article is on the whole very favourable to the working of their present police establishment, and we would again draw the attention of the public to the means by which this comparatively satisfactory state of affairs has been arrived at.

By the report of the Monthly meeting of the Council at Shanghae which was published in the Daily News of the 18th December last it appears that the then strength of the Shanghae police was reported at 101 men. viz., 65 Europeans and 36 Chinese, many of the latter being employed as detectives. The bulk of the Europeans, beginning at the Chief and his Inspectors are either from the London Police Force or soldiers from the regiments which have been stationed there from time to time.

We are not at this moment in possession of the statistics of the Hongkong police so as to be enabled to speak positively of the respective number of Europeans and Asiatics enrolled in the force, but judging from. appearances we should say that the elegant uniform in which they appear in public is generally occupied by dark complexioned, individuals whose livers according to Chinese ideas are of microscopic size; or in other words whose courage is so small that except under the eyes of Europeans they are utterly. useless to prevent the many and serious evils attendant on the presence of the seum of Chinese society which the benevolence of our laws (which by a singular stretch of imagination are supposed to be as applicable to the sensual, vicious and diabolically cruel native of Southern China as to the inhabitant of refined and civilized England) attracts to this favoured spot. It is absolutely necessary that the attention of Government be directed to the disgraceful state of public insecurity to which the lives and properties of the inhabitants of Hongkong are now reduced; within the last few weeks personal assaults sufficient in number to have caused a panic. in most other colonies under British rule have occurred, and but the day before yes. terday a piratical attack exceeding in boldness anything which has yet been attempted, insomuch as it was made almost within sight of our windows, has added another to pected to take cognizance of sea going rascality; but we would remind such objectors that were it not an assured fact that the island of Hongkong is the safest refuge for the hunted pirate which this neighbourhood boasts we should not, in all probabilder of the Alma.

What then is the remedy for this state of affairs.? It is often the case that while there is no difficulty in exposing or declaiming against an abuse there is considerable difficulty in pointing out how it is to be rectified. In this case the only wonder is that the remedy has not yet been adopted, so obvious is it to all.

The first necessity, as all will admit, is an efficient police force. Having granted thus much, few will be found prepared to assert that an efficient force can ever be maintained by means of Asiatic employés when the very qualifications for efficiency are individual courage, honesty, temper and judgment under circumstances of rare trial and in many cases utterly uncontrolled by European supervision. This granted, it is obvieus that none but a purely European force can ever be considered as even approaching the standard of efficiency; and it is probable too after the exposure in our Supreme Court the other day for which the public are mainly indebted to the activity and honesty of P. C. No. 6, people will conclude that the present European members of our Police force require considerable overhauling before it can be said to approach the standard indicated.

The Police force in this settlement have of late given so little cause of complaint, and the result of their vigilance has bene so clearly manifested in diminution of crime that we are reluctant to draw public attention to any lapse of duty on their We do not wish to raise the cry of "where are the police" on every trivial occasion which makes us regret that each individual constable is not Argus eyed, but there are reasonable grounds for calling on the police to check one particular evil which every day attains greater magnitude; and importance. We mean the practice of robbidg packages carried along the streets by coolies. lay or two ago we watched with much interest the gradual diminution of a bale of cotton which, broken probably by accident, afforded a most tempting opportunity to the beggar women and children who now infest the streets. These interesting members of the native population, having no means of gaining an Honest livelihood, emerge from their dens each morning fully prepared for the duties of the day. Under their outside mantle of rags, they carry a wallet fit for the reception of rice, cotton, coal, firewood and every other commodity likely to fall in their way. the bund as well as in the back streets, opposite the doors of the banks and other buildings which are ever surrounded by groups of merchants and brokers, as well as in the most secluded nooks, the same pilfering is carried on. The coolies who carry the goods which are thus diminished, do not interfere. Their countrymen and countrywomen are spoiling the Egyptians, their common enemy, the toreigner. Hence white some old lady tastely dressed in the refuse of half a dozen native and foreign wardrobes nimbly chases a bale of cotton and makes determined dives with her hands into its bursting sides, or while some stalwart coolie who prefers theft to hard work furtively runs a kuife into a rice bag, and greedily watches the grain as it pours out on the ground, the carriers never think of interfering, but on the contrary keep their eyes steadily averted while the work of depredation is going on. It is true that rbm each bale of cotton or bag of rice, comparaively little is taken by each individual, but when llis insignificant amount is mutiplied day after day by the ever increasing crowds of beggars, it becomes really serious. In the case of the bale cotton which we referred to above at least one sixth had been abstracted, and the harpies who hovered round it were still unsatisfied. So with edals. We believe that from one-eighth to onesixth is generally allowed as loss on coals landed from a ship, and stured at any distance from the wharf. If these unfortunates are really destitilte of any means of subsistence, let us by all means do something for them. Let us in concert with the Chinese authorities mature some scheme for their relief, but however we manage let us by all means get rid of them. More gars cannot be imagined, but when to beggary in they add theft, we are bound to take some notice of them. If we can clear them out of the settlement by providing them with some support other than that upon which they now depend, so much

The hills come close to the water's edge in many places, and though sometimes cultivated, are generally quite barren. They are not however entirely worthless, for they produce pine trees and grass. Collecting wood, pine branches and dried grass seems to be the chief occupation of the people of many of the little hamlets on the river side. Two boats are lashed together side by side and then loaded with pine branches or dried grass and floated down the river to the lime We insert the following extracts from the kilns and kilns where their cargoes are bought for fuel. They resemble large floating hay-stacks. Some tea and cassia are also grown, but in very inconsiderable quantities. Above Luk To the hills approach the water side and form a narrow passage known as the Tsat-Pá-nim Gap. This name seems to be a colloquial expression and might be rendered "Seven Layers" or "Seven Strata," and is said to be derived from the strata of rock, (apparently basalt which crop out on the banks of the river.

As we proceed up the river we come to the District town of Tung Tsūn. It is what the Chinese call a "one eved city" i.e. a small place with but one city gate. Like most small Chinese towns, the principal business is in one street extending along the bank of the river. Many boats load here with firewood which they carry to Canton or to Macao. Quite a fine variety of the vellow persimon is found here. I have also noticed here a variety of fig which is of the size and shape the ordinary Levant figs and is ripe October. WE insert the following extract taken from the "Hankow Times" of January 6th :-The antipathy of the Chinese against Foreigners does not appear to be on the decline in these central Provinces. So lately as the 27th August last, Abbé Mabileau, a Roman Catholic Missionary, was brutally stoned to death by the populace in Yewyang-Chow, a city on the borders of Szechuen Province, and that, hard by the Yamun of the chief Mandarin of the place, to whom repeated entreaties for succour had been addressed by the victim. We are happy to hear it rumoured that Mons. Dabry. Consul for the Emperor of the French at this port, is charged with special authority to proceed up the Yangtze to Ching too-foo, the Capital of Szechuen, with a respectable naval force for the purpose of demanding from the Viceroy the condign punished ment of the mandarin and people concerned.

'A second case, in which the result might have been as serious, but for the parties having fortunatey found the way open to run for their lives, occurred at Yoh-chow-foo on the Tungting lake on the 10th, November last. Two English gentlemen, the reverend character of one of whom must be sufficient guarantee for the orderly conduct of both. were walking through that city, when they were suddenly and without provocation assailed by the mob, with stones and brickbats, and, on their remonstrating, the showers of missiles flew so thickly, and the malevolence of the mob shawed itself so plainly in their savage shouts and gestures, that the two gentlemen found it their best course to take to their heels. The more active of the assailants pursued, but happily the fugitives were able to reach an unfrequented part of the town, and take refuge in a house, whence some kindly official attandants assisted them to the Yamun of the Chief Mandarin. He at first seemed shy of sheltering them, but he soon relented, and not only protected them from a furious mob which surrounded his gates velling for the lives of the detested foreigners, but when night fell, compelled them to disguise themselves and sent them in sedans and sufficiently escorted to their boat.

A third case happened in Woo-chang-foo on the opposite bank of the Yang-tze on the 14th Nov. The military examinations happened to be going on. and two gentlenien (one of whom was the chief magistrate of Hongkong,) who had gone across to visit the lions, were set upon by a number of the candidates, and so severely pelted that they had to seek refuge in a shop and remain there until some city guards came to their rescue, and saw them safely to their boat. Both of the last mentioned H.M. Consul, and the necessary measures adopted for procuring the punishment of the offenders, but it is to be feared that remonstrance alone will effect but little towards securing this desirable end. We have now to record a fourth instance, in Jeaugeon, the surgeon of H. I. M. Gunboat Tardif. and Mens. Dupuis, a French resident here. These gentlemen started for a stroll on Sunday afternoon the 3rd December, and they selected for their walk the Han-yang hill, a spot which certainly has the repute of being the quietest and pleasantest of the very few resorts we are favored with. It did not so prove, however, to the unhappy Frenchmen. Whilst threading the short suburb at the foot of the hill, a dog they had with them got into a fight with a native dog, and they were occupied in separating the animals, when a Chinaman armed with a spear sudden. ly ran out upon them from a house hard by. Mons. Dupuis, we believe, chased him back into the house, and by way of retaliation broke some lanterns and other articles of trifling value. They then returned to Mons. Dupuis' house to leave the dog at home. walk. On passing the same place the second time. they found all quiet, but they had not reached the top of the hill above a few minutes, when they found themselves attacked by five or six men armed with carbines, revolvers and spears, and supported by a mob of lookers on, intent upon seeing the fun. Mons. Dupuis attempted to push through the mob and escape, but they turned him back, and he had no alternative but to leap off the platform of the Joss House, where they had been sitting, and tumble himself down the hillside as expeditiously as he could at some risk to life and limb. In this way he managed to get away. The surgeon was less fortunate. He chose the bolder but more hazardous course of accosting his assailants, and attempting a parley with them. He was instantly knocked down and beaten until he lost all consciousness. After a while he recovered when they attacked and beat him again, robbing him of his watch, spectacles, and every thing he had about him. Eventually they fied his hands behind him with his pocket handkerchief and forced him down to the house where the first disturbance had occurred. Having kept him there for a short time, during which they endeavoured to last marched him out to the back of Hanyang and round by the most unfrequented streets to the Taotae's office, where they gave him into custody on the charge of having killed a Chinese. Whilst on their way to the Taotae's they were met by two but these were forthwith attacked in their turn with savage shouts of 'kill the foreign devils," and they had to run for the river-side where fortunately they found an empty boat into which they jumped and so

Mons. Dunuis had meanwhile reported his companion's perilous condition to the French Consul. Mons. Dabry hastened with a few marines to the house where the disturbance had originated, and was and boys, some of whom were afterwards recognized as having been concerned in the attack, together with a quantity of arms and ammunition which they had in store there. The men made a desperate resistance. we are told, to the armed party, and one actually drew a revolver upon the Consul, but of course they were soon overpowered. Having captured these prisoners the Consul proceeded to the Taotae's office where he found the surgeon in a wretched plight in consequence of his maltreatment.

On the following morning the French Consul arried his prisoners to the Taotae in order to have them put on their trial. He was accompanied by H.M. Consul and a number of officials who with the escort and prisoners formed a procession which created quite an excitement in the close crowded atreets of Hankow. Most of the Foreign residents likewise followed hoping to witness the proceedings about to be taken. Nothing however took place, and the prisoners were remanded for the following day, when the Taotae promised they should be put on their trial before himself. We were one of the few who cared to venture the risk of a second disappoint.

Hang-Ki is belived to have made three hundred thousand taels during the time he was at Canton, and to have been squeezed out of one-third of the amount since his return to Peking. When Mr Hart saw him at Canton, shortly before he left, he told him that he intended investing his money in pawnbroking associations, which are about the most profitable class of investments in China." "Mr Wade had a visit from Tsung-how, who talked very rationally on public matters, and alluded to a passage in the classics, which says that, When a system has been too long in operation, it becomes worn out, and requires modification to enable it to endure,' he remarked, 'our system is of that nature, and requires modification and change to enable it to continue,—a very sensible and pertinent observation,"

Many interesting details are given of the coup d'etat, by which the Council of Regency, appointed to govern during the present Emperor's minority, was overthrown, and Prince Kung installed as Prime Minister The circumstances attending the execution of the Princes of I and Ching, or rather the act of suicide they were permitted to substitute for it, forcibly remind us of the custom of Haru-kiri prevailing n Japan. In each case by avoiding a public execution the property of the delinquent is saved from confiscation, and disgrace to his family averted, the difference being that in Japan the act is consummated by means of a short sword worn for the purpose? while in China a silken cord is sent, or supposed to be sent, to the victim by the Emperor. . The sending of the silken cord is a metaphorical expression. No cord is sent them, but immediately, the order to commit suicide they descend to a chamber in the prison of the Imperial Clan Court, where arrangements are made for the purpose, and the machinery of death is kept in readiness. Having mounted on a stool, they request one of the attendants to adjust the noose, and, as soon as this is done, the stool is pulled from under them. In this way died the Princes of I and Ching. The advantage accruing from this mode of death is that it saves their property from confiscation, whereas public decapitation entails
